About Authors

C. B. Bhattacharya ("Defining Who You Are By What You're Not: Organizational Disidentification and the National Rifle Association") received his Ph.D. in marketing from the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania in 1993 and his MBA from the Indian Institute of Management. Prior to joining Boston University, he was an assistant professor of marketing at the Goizueta Business School, Emory University. C. B. is currently working on measuring brand loyalty and brand health from scanner data, determinants of customer retention, and the roles of corporate social responsibility, organizational identification and disidentification in designing marketing strategy. He has a number of scholarly publications in journals like the Journal of Marketing Research, Journal of Marketing, Organization Science (forthcoming), International Journal of Research in Marketing, Journal of the Academy of Marketing Science, Marketing Letters, Journal of Retailing and Consumer Services and other journals. He has presented his research at many national and international forums and won the William Novelli best paper award at the Social Marketing Conference in 1997. He is chairing the Innovations in Social Marketing Conference in 2001. C. B. received the Emory Williams Distinguished Teaching Award in 1995, which is the highest teaching award conferred by Emory University. He is also part of the select group of faculty to make it to Business Week's Outstanding Faculty list. Prior to his Ph.D., he worked for three years as a product manager in Reckitt and Colman of India, Ltd. Address: School of Management, Boston University, 595 Commonwealth Avenue, Boston, MA 01915; telephone: (617) 353-5710; e-mail: cb@bu.edu.

Kurt T. Dirks ("The Role of Trust in Organizational Settings") was an assistant professor at the Faculty of Business Administration, Simon Fraser University. He received his Ph.D. from the University of Minnesota. His current research interests include the creation, destruction, and consequences of trust within teams and organizations, and psychological ownership in the workplace. Address: John M. Olin School of Business, Washington University in St. Louis, 1 Brookings Drive, St. Louis, MO 63130; e-mail: dirks@olin.wustl.edu.

Kimberly D. Elsbach ("Defining Who You Are By What You're Not: Organizational Disidentification and the National Rifle Association") received her Ph.D. from Stanford University in 1993 and is an associate professor of management and Chancellor's Fellow at the Graduate School of Management, University of California, Davis. Her research focuses on the perception and management of individual and organizational images, identities, and reputations. She has studied these symbolic processes in a variety of contexts ranging from the California cattle industry, and the National Rifle Association, to radical environmentalist groups, and Hollywood screenwriters. Using a combination of qualitative field methods and experimental lab methods, her work aims to build theory about the cognitive and emotional processes organizational members use in perceiving their organization, their coworkers, and themselves. Her work has been published in a number of scholarly outlets, including Administrative Science Quarterly, Academy of Management Journal, Organization Science, and Research in Organizational Behavior. Kim has served on a number of editorial boards and is currently a senior editor for Organization Science and Advances in Qualitative Organizational Research. Her paper on managing organizational legitimacy in the California cattle industry won the 1993 Louis Pondy Award for best paper based on a dissertation, from the Organization and Management Theory (OMT) Division of the Academy of Management. She currently serves as an OMT division representative-at-large in the Academy of Management. Address: Graduate School of Management, University of California, Davis, CA 95616; telephone: (530) 752-0910; e-mail: kdelsbach@ucdavis.edu.

Donald L. Ferrin ("The Role of Trust in Organizational Settings") is an assistant professor in the Department of Organization and Human Resources, State University of New York at Buffalo. He received his Ph.D. from the University of Minnesota. His research focuses on interpersonal work relationships, with specific interests in interpersonal trust and intercultural adjustment. Address: Department of Organization and Human Resources, State University of New York, 274 Jacobs Management Center, Buffalo, NY 14260-4000; telephone: 716-645-7900; e-mail: dlferrin@buffalo.edu.

Hans Georg Gemuenden ("Teamwork Quality and the Success of Innovative Projects: A Theoretical Concept and Empirical Evidence") is Professor and Chair of Innovation and Technology Management at the Technical University of Berlin. He chaired the Institute for Applied Management and Corporate Strategy at the University of Karlsruhe, Germany, from 1988–2000. He studied business administration and psychology at the University of the Saarland, Saarbruecken, Germany, where he also later received his Ph.D. He continued his academic career at the University of Kiel, Germany, before joining the University of Karlsruhe. Professor Gemuenden has published several books and articles and presented research at major conferences around the world. His research interests include team-based start-up companies, radical innovations, the cooperation of key people and teams in innovation processes, the management of R&D consortia and technology networks, as well as technology transfer. Address: Technical University of Berlin, Chair for Technology and Innovation Management, Hardenbergstr. 4-S, HAD 29, 10623 Berlin, Germany; telephone: +49(30)314 26 087; fax: +49(30)314 26 089; e-mail: hans.gemuenden@tim.tu-berlin.de.

Jody Hoffer Gittel's ("Supervisory Span, Relational Coordination and Flight Departure Performance: A Reassessment of Post-Bureaucracy Theory") research addresses workplace issues such as the problem of cross-functional coordination. Most notably, she has developed the concept of relational coordination, a communication and relations-intensive form of coordination carried out by group members with an awareness of their relationship to the overall work process and to each other. She has identified both antecedents and performance effects of relational coordination in service settings, such as flight departures and patient care. Her most recent work addresses the problems of cross-organizational and cross-cultural coordination in the context of flight departures and patient care. Address: Harvard Business School, Morgan 131, Soldiers Field Road, Boston, MA 02163; e-mail: jgittel@hbs.edu.
